THE "DAYS OF '49"

Chapter 6

"Demetroff's Vow"

The man from the Donner party and his horse fall exhausted at the gate of Sutter's Fort. During the fight between Sutter and Marsdon, Senora escapes from the house and hiding in a covered wagon sees the Donner man fall. She rushes to him with the others and learns that "Cal" is back on the trail awaiting help. She mounts a horse and rides off to find him. Marsdon and Arabella are ordered away by Sutter, who then learns Senora has gone to find "Cal" and sends some of his men to find her. Meantime Boris returning to his headquarters in the mountains finds his spare horses have been run off by a gang from Pato Alto and with his band rides off to recover them.

"Cal" staggers along the trail toward the Fort. Senora finds him lying in the middle of the trail where he has fainted and tries to revive him. Boris and his men have recovered their herd of horses and are driving them back to the mountains at a mad pace down the trail. The wild herd passes over Senora and "Cal" but they are not seriously injured. Boris dismounts and then taking her in his arms orders his men to bring "Cal" to his rendezvous. Arriving there he revives Senora and has "Cal" bound securely. Senora tells him she has left Sutter because he killed her father. Boris calls his followers declaring he will keep his vow to protect her interests and departs to drive Sutter and his men from the country leaving a guard to hold Senora and "Cal" until his return. Senora goes to "Cal" and tells him Marsdon told her Sutter killed her father. "Cal" tells her this is not true for Sutter was against any violence. She immediately determines to escape and warn Sutter.
